

Willie's Gone To Melville Castle

Oh, Willie's gone to Melville castle. Boots and spurs an a', to bid the ladies a farewell, before he went away.

Willie's young and blithe and bonnie, loved by an and a'.
Oh! What will all the lassies do, when Willie goes away?

The first he met was Lady Kate.
She led him through the hall.
And with a sad and sorry heart
she let the teardrop fall.
Beside the fire stood Lady Grace, said never a word at all.
She thought that she was sure of him,
before he went away.

Oh, Willie's gone to Melville castle ...

Then through the house came Lady Bell,
"rude through you need no crow,
maybe the lad will fancy me,
and disappoint you all."
Down the stair tripped Lady Jean,
the flower among them all',
"oh lassies trust in providence and you'll get husbands all."

Oh, Willie's gone to Melville castle ...

When on his horse he ride away,
they gathered round the door.
He gaily waved his bonnet blue.
They set up such a roar,
their cries, their tears brought Willie back.
He kissed them one and all:
"oh, lassies stay, till I come home,
and then I'll wed you all!"

Oh, Willie's gone to Melville castle ...
